INTRODUCTION.

THE greatest problem of the British government, in their attempt to subdue the rebellion of the United Colonies, was the difficulty of obtaining soldiers. From early times, the superior condition of the British subject had made him loth to serve his country either in the navy or army. The former difficulty had been overcome by the impressment laws, which, limited in their effect to the seaport towns and directed largely against non-residents and criminals, produced only passing ebullitions of discontent. To fill the ranks of the latter, however, no administration had dared to risk the unpopularity of a conscription law, and in her wars Great Britain had for many years relied quite as much on a subsidy system for procuring allies and armies, as upon her own troops. On the breaking out of the American Revolution, this problem offered greater difficulties than usual. Not only was the war one which did not inspire national enthusiasm, but a large percentage of the people and the Opposition in Parliament believed it to be unjust; and the general ignorance of the people of Great Britain of America, as well as its great distance, all combined to make recruiting a failure in the mother-country. Convinced of this inability to obtain the necessary quotas at home, the Ministry sought aid outside. The Hessians of Germany and the Indians of Canada were obtained—troops so cruel as to actually preclude the possibility of conciliation—and from the Colonies themselves were drawn still another force—“the Loyalists”—who, embittered by past persecution, and by the fratricidal nature of the contest, proved scarcely less merciless and vindictive.

Upon the evacuation of Boston, a corps of the refugees from that city was embodied under the command of Timothy Ruggles. After the occupation of New York and the overrunning of New Jersey, the New York Loyalists were organized into De Lancey's Brigade, and New Jersey supplied the troops for Skinner's New Jersey Volunteers, making a force computed in May, 1777, to number about two thousand men. In this year General Howe carried the main part of his army from the head of the Elk, in Chesapeake Bay, through or near the strongly loyal Colonies of Maryland and Delaware, and occupied Philadelphia. This city had an estimated population of some twenty thousand who were neutral or loyal to the King's rule, and large bodies of loyalists in the march had taken the opportunity to join the English forces. Upon taking possession of that city, therefore, further attempts were made to enlist loyalist corps, and among others, Sir William Howe gave permission to James Chalmers, “a gentleman from Maryland, who came into into the British Army at Elk;”* “much respected in the three Lower Counties on Delaware and in Maryland,”† to raise a regiment to be known as the “Maryland Loyalists.”‡ This act was afterwards criticised by an opponent of Howe on the ground that Chalmers, “though much respected in Maryland, was unconnected and without influence in Philadelphia;”|| but his regiment met with as much success in recruiting as any of the loyalists, and so far as we can judge from the names of the officers, was drawn entirely from Maryland; though by General Robertson’s evidence the rank and file of most of the loyal regiments were composed of newly-arrived emigrants. In May, 1778, Chalmers’ regiment was stated to number 336 in all, and it is probable that, cut off from its recruiting base by the evacuation of Philadelphia in the next month, it never numbered more. A partial roster of the regiment is here given. For the commission officers it is believed to be complete:¶

‡ In Montrossor’s Journal it was also called “the 3d Provincial Regt.” In the New York Historical Society’s copy of Rivington’s Army List for 1783 a MS. note records that the uniform was “Red Coat, Olive lapel white button holes.”

The Maryland Loyalists remained in Philadelphia until the beginning of its evacuation, June 16, 1778. It crossed New Jersey with the remainder of Howe's army, being part of General Knyphausen's division, taking part in the battle of Monmouth, and upon its arrival at Sandy Hook was transferred to Long Island, and attached to the command of General Tryon. In this service they occupied different posts on the island, largely for the purpose of procuring fresh provisions and forage. From England, with the probabilities, in those days, of a six to ten weeks' voyage, only salt provisions were obtainable, and the English army was even at times on short allowance of these. To supply the commissariat was therefore a constant struggle, which led to much that disgraced and made the English hated beyond description. So disagreeable was this service to the regular force, that it was largely left to the Hessians and Loyalists, who, trained to see whatever was needed being taken by force (or as it was delicately veiled by words, "impressed"), and having neither patriotism or corps d'esprit to check them, plundered and destroyed at their own pleasure. Of all parts of the Colonies, Long Island probably suffered the most. Occupied by the British from 1776 to 1783, it was depended on for a large part of these supplies, but which the policy of the United Colonies was to destroy. It was therefore the scene of constant descents, skirmishing and harrying, in which the inhabitants were as the nut between the crackers; and these have left a story of brutality and destruction hardly to be equalled, which finds narration in all of our town and county histories. These so shamed the finer feelings of the leaders of the British army that they not merely condemned the few ever convicted, but in at least one case paid out of their own pocket for the destruction done; but the people for the most part dared make no complaint, and indeed both Howe and the Continental Congress complained that for the worst crime committed, but few could be brought to acknowledge its committal. In this occupation the Maryland Loyalists passed the summer and early fall of 1778, and seem to have continued near or in New York till 1782, in which year they served in Florida. A year later, on the conclusion of peace, the larger part of them embarked at New York, on the transport ship Martha, for Nova Scotia, to settle there, but were wrecked off Tusket river, and over one hundred lives lives lost. It is recorded that the troops stood, drawn up in company order, while the women and children were ordered into the boats, and the few survivors among the men were chiefly saved by clinging to wreckage.

The orderly book of this regiment, here printed, covers the period from June 18, 1778, to October 12, 1778. It begins with the evacuation of Philadelphia, and covers the march across the Jerseys, and the foraging tour and cantonment on Long Island. For the period to July 5th, the General Orders of Howe have been printed in the "Kemble Papers," in the Collections of the New York Historical Society for 1882; but there are differences in the following text even in these, and this includes as well the Brigade and Regimental Orders, which were of course not included in the General Orders. For the remainder of the period it fills a gap which has hitherto been vacant, making it of great importance historically. It is also, so far as I can ascertain, the first orderly book of the Loyalists put in print, and has a value, both to the genealogist and to the Maryland historian, who has even failed as yet to mention this regiment. It was kept by Caleb Jones, once sheriff of Somerset county, in Maryland, who in 1776 was arrested and only set at liberty by the Council of Safety on his giving bonds for £200 for his obedience to the self-constituted Whig authorities. He seems to have sought safety in Lord Dunmore's fleet, for he arrived at New York in the frigate Brune
a few

a few months later, and for this flight the General Court at Annapolis declared him an outlaw. He went with the English army to Philadelphia, where he enlisted in the Maryland Loyalists with the rank of captain. At the conclusion of the peace he removed to St. John's, New Brunswick, being one of the original grantees of that city.

This Orderly Book was left in the garret of the John Moore house, at Newtown, having been presumably tossed aside when filled up, for the regiment was then in quarters there. Here it was discovered by Mr. Oliver Hazard Perry, the occupant, whose wife Maria Louisa Moore is a descendant of John Moore, the builder of the house.

NOTE.

SINCE the foregoing history of this regiment was printed, I have discovered that it was transferred to Florida in 1779, or the early part of 1780. At the surrender of the English force at Mobile to Don Bernardo de Galvez, March 14, 1780, among the prisoners taken were "Of the Maryland corps.—1 Sergeant, 15 rank and file."* Not quite a year later, on May 9, 1781, a much larger part were made prisoners of war by Gen. Campbell's surrender of Pensacola to the Spaniards; described in the "state of the forces composing the Garrison of Fort St. George" as "Maryland Loyalists, 1 Major, 4 Captains, 2 first Lieutenants, 5 Ensigns Staff; 1 quarter-master, 1 mate. Serjeants, &c. 9 serjeants, 8 corporals, 3 drummers and fifers, 101 privates. Wounded 1 private. Sick and invalid; 1 serjeant."† In "Farmers Journal of the Siege of Pensacola,"‡ are a few facts concerning the part borne by this regiment, Major M'Donald being at that time the officer in command. From this same source we learn that the prisoners were transferred to Havana, and on June 30, 1781, sailed for New York, where they arrived on July 12, and were cantoned in and about Newtown, L. I.

Though these are the only two buildings mentioned in the Orders, the following extract from The New Jersey Gazette of Aug. 5, shows much greater destruction during the retreat.

[Extract from a letter from Monmouth, dated July 18.]

"I have been waiting from the time the enemy passed thro' this country till the present, in expectation that some of your correspondents would, thro' the channel of your paper, have given the public an account of their conduct to the inhabitants—but not having seen any as yet, and as it has been such as every honest person ought to despise, I take this opportunity of giving a short sketch of it; which, if you think will be any satisfaction to your readers, you may insert in your paper. The devastation they have made in some parts of Freehold exceeds perhaps any they have made for the distance in their route thro' this State, having in the neighborhood above the Court-house burnt and destroyed eight dwelling houses, all on farms adjoining each other, besides barns and out houses. The first they burnt was my own, then Benjamin Covenhoven's, George Walker's, Hannah Solomon's, Benjamin Van Cleav's, David Covenhoven's and Garrit Vanderveer's; John Benham's house and barn they wantonly tore and broke down so as to render them useless. It may not be improper to observe that the two first mentioned houses that were burnt adjoined the farm, and were in full view of the place where Gen. Clinton quartered. In the neighborhood below the Court-house they burnt the houses of Matthias Lane, Cornelius Covenhoven, John Antonidas, and one Emmans; these were burnt the morning before their defeat. Some have the effrontery to say, that the British officers by no means countenance or allow of burning. Did not the wanton burning of Charleston and Kingston in Esopus, besides many other instances, sufficiently evince the contrary, their conduct in Freehold I think may—the officers having been seen to exult at the sight of the flames, and heard to declare that they never could conquer America until they burnt every rebel's house, and murdered every man, woman and child. Besides, this consideration has great weight with me towards confirming the above, that after their defeat, thro' a retreat of twenty-five miles, in which they passed the houses of numbers well affected to their country, they never attempted to destroy one. Thus much for their burning."

Price $1.00.

“The lack of material for the study and history of American trade and commerce before the Revolution is so great that it hardly requires mention. In the writings of Charles Davenant, Josiah Child, Joshua Gee, William Douglas, John Ashley, Edmund Burke, Adam Smith, and in a few fugitive pamphlets, is more or less matter on this subject, but it is at best imperfect and fragmentary. Yet is this topic not only important from an economic point of view, but equally so for the history of the causes of our Revolution; for the trade restrictions and Admiralty Courts on the one side, and the illicit trading and nullification of the English trade laws on the other side, were a most important element in the origin of that war.

"In the library of Mr. Gordon L. Ford, of Brooklyn, New York, are two volumes of practically unknown papers which throw much light on this subject. Originally belonging to Chief Justice William Lee and Sir George Lee, members of the Privy Council, they consist, for the most part, of the printed briefs in marine cases arising in the French and Spanish War of 1739-1748, appealed from the Admiralty Courts in England or in the English colonies to that portion of the Privy Council severally described as the 'Lords Commissioners for Appeals in Prize Causes,' the 'Committee of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council for Affairs of the Plantations,' or the 'Lords Commissioners for hearing Appeals from the Plantations in America in Cause of Prize.' As in appeal cases now, only enough of these briefs were printed to give the Commissioners and the opposing advocates each a copy; and this probably limited the edition to a dozen or fifteen copies, which sufficiently accounts for their rarity and neglect as historical matter. In these legal arguments and statements, however, is a great mass of American naval and commercial history; and these particular copies are given especial value by many long notes of the two Lees, giving their opinions, the positions of the different members of the Privy Council, and also the decisions of that body.

"To make these papers better known, I have prepared a list of all that treat of American trade, to which I have added a few notes. The titles are taken from the printed endorsements, which in each case is given in full and lined as printed. In a number of the briefs the dates have been left blank, and in others have been filled in with ink, which in this list are bracketed and printed in italics. The arrangement is by the ship in question, and chronologically by the date as written by the Lees. All matter in the notes in quotation is taken from their manuscript notes."—PREFACE.
